Myrrh has the undisputed reputation to function in the binding up of wounds and as a healer of open wounds. Myrrh is extremely effective in speeding up the flow of sluggish circulatory fluid by a factor of 4 to 1. This, along with its catalyst properties with other herbs, makes it beneficial for the heart and circulatory system. It has long been taken internally and applied to the gums, as a dental herb to prevent infection often experienced after tooth extractions. After the umbilical cord is cut, Myrrh is applied to prevent infection. For sore nipples, Myrrh is mixed with Vitamin E oil, from capsules, or melted beeswax and applied to the area. Myrrh is a first-rate remedy for infected sore tonsils and sore throat. It may be used as a gargle 80 drops to a 1/2 cup of water, or as a coating when powdered Myrrh is mixed with Vitamin E oil, from capsules. Myrrh raises the immunity and the white blood count to fight infections.* DOSAGE: 10 to 40 drops three times per day. SOURCES: Dr. Alexander Greenfield, "Herbs Medicinal;" Dr. John R.
